AH and JD reported a lot of fighting in the relationship, and AH reported physical violence in about half of their fights. She reported his having hit her first, open handed, after he started drinking after six to nine months of being together. She reported always hitting him back as a point of pride but admitted that she eventually initiated the hitting herself. In particular, JD spoke of trying to deescalate their fights by walking away or leaving, as he had learned that that was something he should do.

She reported trying to initiate a fight with him one night, by slapping him, when she was offended by what he said. This did not erupt into a physical fight. However, they had a physical fight the next day, during which he reportedly pulled her hair, kicked her and bruised her face. She had a nurse come to examine her injuries. It was after that that I first heard that AH was considering making charges against him for physical abuse. It was also at this time, I believe, that she showed me photos of her injuries.

He said "she gave as good as she got and she started it." In person, he showed me his fingertip that had been sliced off by a vodka bottle he reported that she threw at him —at some unknown time--and mentioned damage to his chin.

I also had some contact with AH, in person and by phone, and she spoke of more fighting and the decision to file against JD.

The physical violence that occurred between them appeared to me to be mutual. They each engaged in this behavior and were each victims of domestic violence, both in their families of origin and in their marriage.
